

Medical Education in the next decade seems to be focused more on the harmonization of body and mind, people and system which the readers will recognize from the articles shown in this volume. It is a great honor for the SEAJME to have the articles from our energetic medical teachers from Singapore, India, Nepal, Indonesia, Netherlands, DPR Korea and Thailand sharing their experiences on professionalism, communication, classroom teaching to community practice.

The first SEARAME International Medical Education conference had been conducted in Indonesia from November 19 to 23, 2010, for all SEARAME members who joined the conference may have found the conference very successful, there was a mix of medical, nursing and midwifery educators. The concepts and idea related to health professional education were discussed which include issues of quality, multi-profession education and service provision, ethics and the strengthening of public health in all health professional programs. These interesting topics will be published in SEAJME and frontlines medical education journals and in the near future SEAJME will have more interesting articles from multi-professions.

Reorientation of Medical Education will be the next issue to be carried out since many challenges have arisen such as: changing epidemiology and demography, inequity among and within countries, galloping sophistication and cost of technology, ready availability of information to patients, globalization and trade agreements, market force and dehumanization of medicine. SEARAME and SEAJME should be able to enhance the value and quality of medical education by acquiring from writers new ideas, plan of action, or concepts in order to promote patients and community sensitive medical education issues, careful choice of technology, ethics and more regional and global partnership for the new era of medical education.

Nantana Sirisup